

Susan Sloan, M.D.

Dr. Susan Sloan joined the East Tennessee State University (ETSU) faculty in 2002 and is the Associate Director of internal medicine residency training. She is an internist with ETSU Physicians and Associates and serves on the CME advisory board for the Southern Medical Journal.

In 2003, she was named by the National Library of Medicine (NLM) as one of history's most influential women in medicine and is featured in a traveling exhibit which originated at the NLM headquarters in Bethesda, MD. This touring exhibit also includes the Living Legends award winners and Dr. Sloan is featured there as well. She is currently serving as the President-Elect for the Association of American Indian Physicians and is the Regional Affiliate for the AAIP National Diabetes Program.

Earlier this year, she was invited by the American Medical Association to serve on an expert advisory panel that is preparing new guidelines for health care professionals on recommendations for addressing the childhood and adolescent obesity epidemic, as well as serving on an expert advisory panel that is dealing with adolescent health care disparities.

Her most recent publication in the women's health arena is Attitudes Toward Hormone Replacement Therapy in the New Millennium: University Physicians' and Patients' Perspective. Investig. Med. 2005 Sept; (6):305-11 (Ismail HM, Alevritis E, Guha B, Olive K, Sloan S)